(New York, NY– 15 September 2022) A lunchtime event hosted by the Global Security Forum will take place on September 22, 2022, in New York, on the margins of the opening of the 77th Session of the UN General Assembly. This event will bring together policy and security experts to discuss the evolving global security landscape. The war in Europe, the global pandemic and climate crises have refocused the world's attention on issues such as energy insecurity, supply chain vulnerability, food scarcity, and the impact of disinformation on conflict. Against this backdrop, what is the outlook for global security and strategic partnerships? How can the structures and institutions established to address international peace and security adapt, and can they be effective in this changed environment? Or will they demonstrate resilience and adaptability as states recognize the criticality of international cooperation even as they chart their own course? This event is hosted by The Soufan Center in partnership with the Center on National Security at Fordham Law.
